Often in my field I review papers from researchers in Asia (reviews are not double blind) which are poorly written. By poorly written, I don't mean that the prose is not pleasing to the eye, that there are problems with how the writing flows, or that there are innocuous typos or spelling mistakes. Instead, the grammar used by the authors differs seriously from normal English, and often produces significant changes in the meaning of sentences.

Poor structure, in an essay, can involve writing an essay that doesn't have well organized ideas. It can also involve writing one that lacks cohesion, making it unreadable. Some poorly structured essays reiterate the structure of the essay's resources, making the work confused and disjointed.

Understanding A Poor Structure Of An Academic Paper
Here are some recommendations for writing reviews that help the authors and improve the quality of the symposium. Your job as a reviewer is to write detailed reviews, even for excellent papers. Tell the authors why you liked their paper, so that the authors know what made them so successful. Even if your opinion is that the paper is poorly written or poorly thought-out, you can still provide constructive criticisms to help the authors, and in the long run, the conference.
